Understanding Goodwill's Calendar

Our color system

At Goodwill, we tag over 95 percent of our merchandise with color-coded tags—blue, yellow, orange, green, and red.

Each week a different color is used to tag the items. For example, one week every item will be tagged blue. The next week it will be a different color, maybe red or orange.

What you see on the calendar are Goodwill's daily sales. This is merchandise that has been on the sales floor for several weeks. For instance, once an item tagged a certain color has been out for three weeks, it is reduced to 50 percent of its original price for the next week.

After an item has been on display for a full five weeks, it is evaluated and, as a rule, removed from the floor and sold in the Goodwill Outlet store or for salvage.

So if you see something that is a value to you—get it now. It probably will not last!

Items that may not be as great of a bargain to you will go to half-off after a few weeks – take the chance if you dare. On other days we run extreme sales—10 for $5 or our 99-cent sale. If you really want a deal and are willing to wait, this can be the best option for you!

Job Brings Family Closer Together

Forced to find employment after jail time, Renee rebuilds tattered relationship with children.

By: Hevenile Smith, Career Counselor

After living in the fast lane and experiencing life behind bars, Renee Harris was released to move into transitional housing, a place where former inmates can begin readjusting, start a job search, reconnect with family members, and make some positive connections.

The program required Renee to attend weekly meetings and Drug Court and get a job.

Renee came to Goodwill to begin a new process in her life. She entered the Career Solutions Job Readiness program on January 16, 2008, with her head held down and very little confidence.

“My first time meeting Ms. Harris I could tell she had a determined spirit. All she needed was a little encouragement, motivation, and direction to get out and make the steps to gain employment,” says Hevenile Smith, Renee’s career counselor.

Renee interviewed several times but was never hired. Hevenile placed Renee in the Situational Assessment Program Goodwill offers.

After one month, Goodwill hired Renee as a full-time employee, working in the warehouse hanging clothes.

Today, Renee is living with her family. She has been clean for 10 months and continues to take one day at a time on this new life’s journey.

“Goodwill helped me gain a positive outlook on my life. I have a close relationship with my children unlike before—because of my past decisions,” says Renee.

Renee will complete Drug Court on October 5, and she is making preparations to become a new grandmother. “Ms. Harris is excited about her new life and forever grateful to those who encouraged her along the way,” says Hevenile.
