From the Dean

I’d been long fascinated with bees—that is, until they took up residence in my son’s bedroom. About a decade ago bees found their way into the ceiling of a basement bedroom and on into our home. Over the next seven years, beekeepers would be in and out of our house, inspecting the hive and marveling at the persistence of a queen and her drones.

They would put a stethoscope to the hardwood over the floor joists that the bees had used to frame their hive, hoping to trace the scope of the bees’ activity and the size of the hive. Our final expert identified the visitors as Italians but was mystified by their entrance strategies. He spoke in hushed, reverential tones, with a kind of priestly reverence, as if visiting one of nature’s cathedrals.

Yes, I was amazed that the bees had chosen my house (why not my neighbor’s or the one down the street?). Yes, I now know the bees are now building fewer hives in the wild (because of climate change, pollution, and, some say, the evolving migratory patterns of aggressive southern species). Yes, the several quarts of honey, harvested the first time we removed a hive, were wonderfully sweet. But when the Lord pointed his people toward a land “flowing with milk and honey,” I’m pretty sure he didn’t mean my home office.

Scripture suggests that honey is illustrative of the Word of God (Psalms 19 and 119). Honey is likened to wisdom for the soul (Proverbs 24:13, 14). The stories of the Bible often depict honey as a gift (Genesis 43:11, 1 Kings 14:3). The triumphant entry of David into Jerusalem is accompanied by a Mardi Gras-like distribution of honey cakes to men, women, and children (2 Samuel 6:19).

Honey has medicinal value. Sore throats, fevers, hangovers, and dysentery may all be treated with one tablespoon of honey (plus your favorite additive). Some homeopaths will go so far as to say that one tablespoon of honey (64 calories and 17 grams of carbohydrates) can kill bacteria and disinfect cuts and scrapes. [Please see your doctor for authoritative advice on the use of honey].

You’d think that, in possession of all this good news, I’d have tried to find some way to live with the bees. (The consulting carpenter assured us they wreaked no damage on the house.) But eventually, after numerous attempts to coax the bees from their hives, we pried the siding away and removed the bees manually.

Maybe it was the risk of being stung. Maybe it was the fear of the outside world coming into my house. Maybe it was the disturbing mystery of it all. Whatever the case, until further notice, I’ll take my honey from a Mason jar and leave the mystery of bees and their honey to apologists and theologians.

Kyrie eleison.

And [Jonathan] put forth the end of the rod, and dipped it in the honeycomb. And he carried his hand to his mouth and his eyes were enlightened.

1 Samuel 14:27

Bolivia 2011

Last January, I traveled to our mission in Bolivia with three wonderful travel companions, Ed Miller, Amy Sky and our (cheer) leader Walker Mathews. Upon our arrival at La Villa, the children welcomed us with open arms, just as past pilgrims had promised. We braided hair, played Uno, got whipped in basketball and tried to communicate as best we could. Even though there was lots of activity, I had a hard time connecting with the children, so by Tuesday afternoon, I had run out of steam. Then Neya sat down beside me, and in a gentle but resolute way began talking to me. She knows a bit of English, so with that and lots of sign language, we talked. We talked about previous pilgrims, my son included, what sort of music we liked, and school. When it was time to go that afternoon, I found myself about to cry. That sneaky little girl had planted a seed of love in my heart and I did not want to leave them. With one conversation, I had fallen in love with them all.

The most consistent comment I hear from past pilgrims is that they are surprised to find that children with so few worldly goods are so happy. My takeaway was different. I saw children who had been abandoned by their mothers. Some abandonment had been involuntary since their mother had died of cancer. Some abandonments were much more violent. My experience was extreme gratefulness for our church’s role in picking those children up, providing them with a loving home and a Mama and a chance to heal those scars.

I asked Lila, Amistad’s Executive Director, what her goals were for these children. I expected a typical American response such as go to university, be gainfully employed, etc. What she said was that she wanted every one of her children to know the heart of God. With your continued prayers for each of our children, you help them know the heart of God. I challenge you to memorize the names of at least the eight children that live in our house, Kantua, so you can pray for them and Mama Maria by name. If you need help, let me tell you why I love them: I love Neya for being the teenage girl that she is—attitude included. I love Felicidad because she cannot be beat in any sport. I love Delina because she is the most like me, studious and reserved. I love Noemina because she is always happy and smiling and reminds me of my daughter. I love Sylvia because she has a lovely sense of style. I love Wilson because if there is a limit, he will push it. I love Alex because he needs it the most. I love Marina because she is the sweetest, loveliest little girl.

Go experience for yourself if possible. It is at once both an easy and difficult trip.

--Pam Lasley
