Understanding Goodwill's Calendar

Our color system

At Goodwill, we tag over 95 percent of our merchandise with color-coded tags—blue, yellow, orange, green, and red.

Each week a different color is used to tag the items. For example, one week every item will be tagged blue. The next week it will be a different color, maybe red or orange.

What you see on the calendar are Goodwill's daily sales. This is merchandise that has been on the sales floor for several weeks. For instance, once an item tagged a certain color has been out for three weeks, it is reduced to 50 percent of its original price for the next week.

After an item has been on display for a full five weeks, it is evaluated and, as a rule, removed from the floor and sold in the Goodwill Outlet store or for salvage.

So if you see something that is a value to you—get it now. It probably will not last!

Items that may not be as great of a bargain to you will go to half-off after a few weeks – take the chance if you dare. On other days we run extreme sales—10 for $5 or our 99-cent sale. If you really want a deal and are willing to wait, this can be the best option for you!

Single Mom Desperate for Work

Seki churns out applications in hopes of landing a job.

Seki gets her first raise next week.

A single mother of four, Seki had been out of work for over a year when she stepped into Career Solutions. "I remember Seki as a soft spoken, quiet young woman," says Angie Griffin, her career counselor.

After she signed up for job search help with Goodwill, Seki worked relentlessly at securing a job. She had her sights set on a clerical position with DHS, but refused to put all her applications in one basket. "Seki sometimes filled out over 13 applications a week," says Angie who admits she was impressed with Seki's dedication.

Angie called DHS's hiring manager to talk with him about Seki's qualifications. After the interview, the manager told Seki to check back in two weeks. In the meantime, Seki wasn't relying on that one interview—she had two others lined up with the Army Air Force Exchange Service and Anthony's Pizza.

The pizza place offered Seki a job as a cashier

"I feel very good about the services I've received—the easy access to computers for doing online applications..."

and she took it. "Seki never just stands idle. She's a great worker," says her employer.
